The market became heavy, and closed weak at almost the bottom.

Low temperatures in the northwest, with a possibility that the cold weather may extend to the corn belt, prompted buying of corn by shorts, resulting in considerable firmness. Prices at the close were ½ lower to ½0½ higher.

A feature of the trade in oats was the buying of December and May by country houses. This, in some quarters, was said to indicate that farmers were unwilling to sell their oats at piesent prices.
